It is located in the historic Palazzo Genovese, in the Dorsoduro area of the city, and looks out onto the Grand Canal and an interior garden. Attractions like the church of S. Maria della Salute, the Punta della Dogana (home of the Francois Pinault Foundation) and the famous Guggenheim Museum are only a short walk away. A period palazzo with Gothic facade and exclusive design interiors presents a harmonious contrast with the ancient Venetian quarter in which it stands, which now hosts the best of contemporary art. Built in the late 19th century in a neo-Gothic style, the Palazzo Genovese fits in well with the architecture of the city around it – the facade on the Grand Canal, lined with typical red and white buildings, is pierced by many windows, while on the other side the entrance on Campo di San Gregorio, with an equally elaborate façade, provides access to the evocative garden with its bamboo, ivy and central well. Inside, the combination of classical and contemporary styles make for a unique creation where the relationship with the water dominates – the Sina Centurion Palace's unusual interiors, exclusive design, select materials and striking colours recall the idea of the city as a gateway to the East. For dining the choice lies between the white room, specially designed to highlight the magnificent view of the Grand Canal, the exclusive outdoor terrace – leave plenty of time for a reservation – or the indoor garden where in summer the floral fragrances mix with the mouth-watering aromas of the typical dishes prepared by the chef. It's favourite of international stars and VIPs. Antinoo's Lounge & Restaurant is the ideal venue for a romantic dinner with stupendous view of Venice, thanks also to a terrace overlooking the city. Executive chef Giancarlo Bellino offers simple dishes embodying a deep respect for the preparation and choice of their ingredients, marking a return to the past – simplicity and honesty with straightforward cooking rooted in tradition, the memories of a region or a historic moment. condenastjohansens.com
